FINTECH AND GROWTH

Fintech engineering, payments and risk. The social layer and everything users touch.

Between us, multiple global web3 hackathon wins and production fintech experience.

THE GAP

Prediction markets made betting correct. They forgot to make it fun.

You pick a side, then wait hours or months to find out. Nothing happens in between, and nobody is there with you. The quickest market anyone runs settles in five minutes, and you play it alone, on a screen built for one.

Everything people actually love about trading, the group chat, the running score, the screenshot of the win, happens somewhere else entirely.

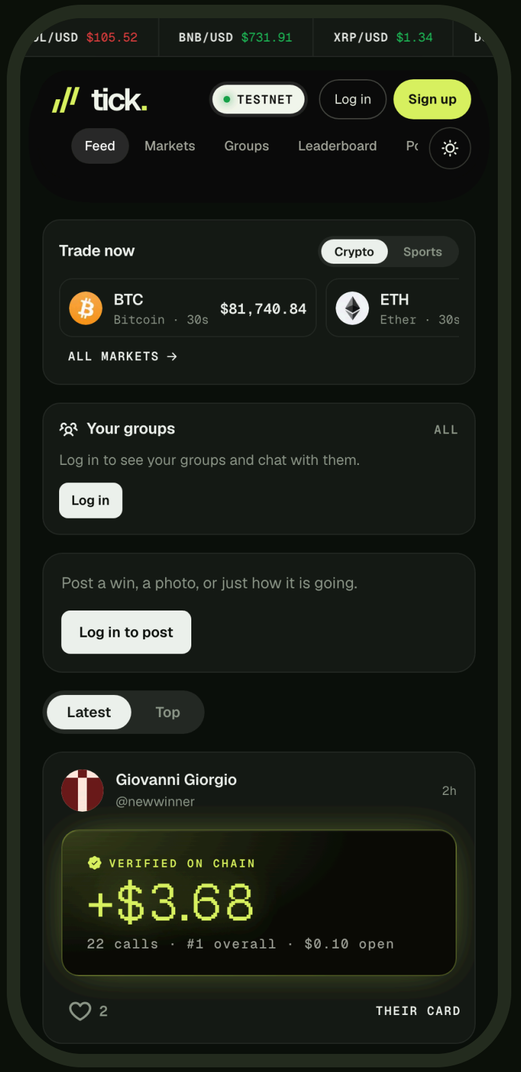

WHAT TICK IS

Thirty seconds.
Your crew.
A card that proves it.

Will this price be higher thirty seconds from now? Call it from ten cents. It settles against a published price, on chain, with nobody refereeing the result.

You play it in a room with your friends, against a scoreboard that re-sorts every thirty seconds. Win, and Tick draws the card from your real record and posts it to the group.

That loop, a result every thirty seconds and something worth sharing at the end of it, is what turns a market into a game people come back to.

Where this goes next.

Solana	The market and social programs on a chain built for this loop, with wallet handoff on mobile.
Real money	Mainnet, and card checkout so a first deposit takes no crypto at all.
More to call	Live sport in play, and equities beyond the opening ten.
Rooms that pay	Private leagues, entry pots and a cut of the room, so a group is worth running.

The category is already worth billions. Nobody owns the fast, social one.

Where the money is

Polymarket and Kalshi were each valued in the billions on 2025 rounds, on long-dated markets played alone.

Where the users are

Fantasy sports and trading groups are social by default. That audience has no prediction market built for it.

Where we sit

The thirty-second market, played in groups, with proof worth posting. First and only.

Raising [$___] at [$___]

To take the rooms to mainnet, put card checkout in front of the first deposit, and turn paid private leagues into the revenue line.
